“What’s That?”

Red fox

Oil on linen, 20 x 32

There are few subjects that go with a snowy background as well as a red fox. His warm earthen red-orange can really jazz up the coolness of a snowscape. This background is very typical of those places where I grew up in the northeastern winter. Seeing the fox so close is not. Our friend has just heard something behind him on his winter wandering. Is it a rodent or bird? Is it a larger predator or man or some other threat? Just as often it could be just a clump of snow falling from a branch above.
