

My favorite time of day is at dusk when I'm out in the field. Nowhere do I appreciate that magical time more than in Africa. It is easier to witness more of what is going on in the vast open areas that I frequent. Animals are changing "shifts." Most are retiring from the day, some are getting ready for their time of the night. This lion is checking out this area for game to potentially ambush later in the dark. Of course it has nothing at all to do with the fact that it is always time for that "Sundowner."

GUY COHELEACH

Resides: Hobe Sound, Florida
b. 1933, New York, USA

Selous Dusk
African lion
Oil on linen, 8 x 14